Idaho Loners : Hermits, Solitaries, And Individualists

Synopsis

The gist of this book can be summed up in the words of Chinese hermit Shan-chuan: "I have my place in the world. In winter I wear skins. In summer I wear hemp. In spring I plow and plant and have enough to do. In fall I harvest and gather and have enough to eat. When the sun rises I get up. When it sets, I rest. I am free to do what I want in this world, and with this I am content." So would say Wildhorse Cowgirl, The Cove Recluse, Buckskin Bill, and the others in this book.

I really enjoyed this book the the last person that Cort Conley wrote about down most of his life outside of Idaho and was always around people. What James Angleton did for America was good but by no means was he an Idaho loner!

Wow! I was looking for some Idaho history. I got so much more. This was a wonderful book--surprising too. Was so well written and researched that i even read thru the parts that i had no previous interest in. Great read

Short bios of many interesting people who have "lived off the grid" of what we consider to be "normal" civilization. They are very inventive and self sufficient people who just want to live solitary lives for the most part. Quite an interesting book.

This is a very interesting book for those who live in Idaho or those who have an interest in it's history. Idaho has had many interesting individuals and this is a good read. Not a great book but definitely worth the money.

Good

Arrived in good time and good shape. It is interesting to look at the lives of different people.

Excellent transaction, item as described

Great read, but the authors perception of "loner" and my definition varies greatly. Many of the people in this book, lived alone, but close to town and enjoyed when anyone would come visit. Still a great book though, and buy it again if I ever lose my copy.
