Empires Of Medieval West Africa: Ghana, Mali, And Songhay (Great Empires Of The Past (Library))

Synopsis

Beginning about 1200 CE, the Mali, Songhay, and Ghana empires spread their sequential influence across the western horn of Africa. This title discusses the vital role salt and other natural resources played in the development of the empires, the rich and diverse cultures, and the influence of the Islamic Empire on every day life.

David C. Conrad holds a Ph.D. from the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London and is professor emeritus of history at the State University of New York-Oswego. President of the Mande Studies Association since 1986, Conrad has been a fellow of the Royal Geographic Society, the Fulbright Foundation, and the National Endowment for the Humanities. Some of his books include A State of Intrigue: The Epic of Bamana Segou, Epic Ancestors of the Sunjata Era, and Sunjata: A West African Epic of the Mande Peoples. In 2008, he appeared in an episode of the Travels to the Edge with Art Wolfe and in the Discovery Channel series Into the Unknown with Josh Bernstein.

It's a good place to start for anyone interested in wanting to learn about the pre-colonial African Empires. Not much in-depth information on the social urbanization of the regions or other aspects of life. My biggest problem is finding repeated passages. I'd read a excerpt from a medieval travelers description or paragraph from the author repeated on the following page.

The book is very informative. Initially the search feature did not work and I wrote a bad review because of it. This is a good book because I want to learn about pre-colonial sub-Saharan African history.
